ABSTRACT

Methods are disclosed for determining the activity and function of gene products based on their change to the phenotype of cells when contacted with a surrogate molecule identified through screening of a recombinant peptide library. By identifying peptides which bind gene products for which the function is not yet known, tools are provided for determining their function and obtaining drug candidates.

10

5

15

20

25

30

35